

SOMETHING WORTH HANDING OVER.

I'm a plumber. I built a quoting tool for the guys standing at your counter, and I'd like them to know it exists.

I run Tom Falk Plumbing & Heating. A while back I built Dead Hand because I kept losing money at the kitchen table — tired, customer waiting, and the number I said in the next thirty seconds was the one I had to honor in the morning.

You know the guys I mean. One truck, maybe three. Good at the work. They price in their head, and most are better at it than they think — but not at seven on a Friday night. Some are underwater on jobs they would swear made money.

BUILT FOR THE SMALL SHOP, NOT THE ENTERPRISE.

The big field-service platforms are built for a company with a dispatcher, an office and an onboarding budget. That is a real business and they serve it well. It just isn't the man at your counter with one truck and a helper.

I'm not trying to get in the truck with everyone who works for every company. I'm trying to get in the truck with the ones it will actually help. That is why it is priced by the size of the shop instead of by the head, and why there is no implementation package. A one-man shop doesn't need onboarding. He needs the right number at the kitchen table.

WHAT IT DOES THAT THE FLAT-RATE BOOKS DON'T

- The numbers are his. The flat-rate books sell a maintained price list and update it quarterly. Dead Hand ships the shape of a job with every price blank — his town, his overhead, his payroll.
- Not charged by the head. Per-tech pricing costs a shop more every time it hires. This is flat by shop size.
- Nothing to set up. No implementation fee, no onboarding package, no consultant.
- The price is on the website. Nobody has to sit through a demo to find out what it costs.
- Margin on every line as he builds the price — before he says the number, not after the job.

$12.99 a month for the calculator; $45 to $180 flat by shop size for the whole book of jobs. The cheapest per-tech book runs about three times the calculator for a single man, plus a few hundred before he quotes anything.

NO SPIFF, AND THAT'S ON PURPOSE.

I'm not offering you a cut. Plenty of houses don't let their people take money from a vendor, and I'm not going to hand you something you'd have to declare or turn down. The honest version is simpler: someone doing better work and making more money is a better customer for you. The ones who guess low are the ones who quietly disappear owing you money.

IF YOU WANT TO POINT SOMEONE AT IT

Tell them getdeadhand.com. That's the whole thing — nothing to sign them up for, no form for you to fill in.

IF IT HELPS, THE SENTENCE THAT WORKS

"THERE'S A PLUMBER UP IN PA WHO BUILT A QUOTING APP FOR GUYS LIKE YOU. TWELVE BUCKS A MONTH, NO APP STORE."

THERE'S A COUNTER SHEET TOO

A one-page version with this code, sized for the counter or the board. Print as many as you want:
