

SOMETHING WORTH HANDING OVER.

I kept losing money at the kitchen table — tired, customer waiting, and the number I said in the next thirty seconds was the one I had to honor in the morning. So I built a quoting tool, and I'd like the guys at your counter to know it exists.

I'm a plumber. I've run a plumbing and heating shop for years, and I built this for my own truck first. Dead Hand sets a shop's labor rate, material margin and overhead once, then does the number on the spot and hands the customer a clean estimate. $12.99 a month, in a browser — no app store, no install, no demo call.

NO SPIFF, AND THAT'S ON PURPOSE.

I'm not offering you a cut. Plenty of houses don't let their people take money from a vendor, and I'm not going to hand you something you'd have to declare or turn down.

WHY IT'S WORTH THE COUNTER SPACE

You carry these guys on terms. The ones who guess low are the ones who quietly disappear owing you money — not because they're bad at the work, but because they priced a job in their head at seven on a Friday and ate the difference all year.

Someone doing better work and making more money is a better customer for you. That's the whole argument. A shop that prices right stays on the books, keeps the truck full, and keeps buying.

IF IT HELPS, THE SENTENCE THAT WORKS AT THE COUNTER

“THERE'S A PLUMBER UP IN PA WHO BUILT A QUOTING APP FOR GUYS LIKE YOU.
TWELVE BUCKS A MONTH, NO APP STORE.”

COUNTER SHEETS

A one-page version with this code on it, sized for the counter or the board. Print it yourself from getdeadhand.com/counter — or email me and I'll put a stack in the mail to the branch. No charge, no strings.

A working plumber in Pennsylvania

Dead Hand · support@getdeadhand.com · getdeadhand.com/counter